International Volunteer HQ partners with hundreds of colleges and universities to offer one week roving Medical Campaigns abroad for groups of pre-med, medical, and nursing students. Everything is organized for you, and we tailor our programs to suit the specific needs of your university group.

This is a unique opportunity for students to travel between regional communities alongside local medical professionals, providing health education, general checkups and treatment to children and adults.

Students not only gain invaluable hands-on medical experience in an international environment, but they also make a positive impact in improving access to healthcare within under-resourced communities around the world.

What faculty & students say:

I chose IVHQ because of their approach to Responsible Volunteer Travel, the level of service and support I received, and the affordability of their fees. All of my students had access to information ahead of time and the local team were also EXCELLENT on the ground. As a faculty leader, I was completely satisfied and I very much feel that our project was suitable for our group, with all of us growing and learning exponentially from the experience. The local team was excellent in every way.

Michelle Osmond

Faculty Leader for the Bachelor of Science in Nursing Group from Algonquin College, Canada

One of the best experiences I got out of this trip was the impact I had on the communities I travelled to. We helped hundreds of people in such a short amount of time, which really filled my heart with happiness.
